Binding and internalization of anti-epidermal growth factor receptor immunoglobulin G of monoclonal antibody C225 in an ovarian cancer cell line (KF-B-T3). We examined binding and internalization of antibody-antigen complexes of C225, an IgG2 monoclonal antibody that binds to the extracellular domain of epidermal growth factor receptor, in the human ovarian cancer cell line, KF-B-T3. KF-B-T3 cells were found to be highly sensitive to C225 antibody-mediated growth inhibition, and they also demonstrated high-affinity binding of C225 by flow cytometry. Specificity of binding was shown by inhibition studies using an irrelevant monoclonal antibody and internalization studies. Scatchard analysis of the association and dissociation data suggested a
