Anatomical localization and partial characterization of 2'-deoxyguanosine-5'-triphosphate-forming activity in the hematopoietic cells of B6C3F1 mice.

Murine bone marrow contains a

2'-deoxyguanosine-5'-triphosphate (dGTP)-specific, Mg<sup>2+</sup>-dependent, dGTP pyrophosphatase (dGTPase) that is responsible for the synthesis of nucleotides such as dGTP from nucleoside triphosphates (NTP). NTP hydrolysis is catalyzed by a different enzyme. A membrane-associated dGTPase is located predominantly in the hematopoietic cells. Little is known of the physiological function of this activity, but one can assume that it is involved in the regulation of proliferation of the cells. Purification of the membrane-associated dGTPase was achieved by fractionating bone marrow homogenates on a DEAE-cellulose column followed by chromatography on a Toyopearl DEAE-650M. The enzyme was solubilized with detergents such as
